ANNUAL REPORT OF THE
BOARD OF EDUCATION, OF THE TOWN OF KENSINGTON.

The members of the Board of Education having harmoniously and to the best of their ability discharged the duties of their office, are enabled to report a satisfactory condition of our schools, and very gratifying results of school work for the year. Indeed we feel warranted in saying that there is a new awakening of educational interest throughout the town. There are other indications of this than the unparalleled number of visits to the several schools. We have been exceptionally fortunate in our teachers, their merits have been recognized and appreciated, and their efforts most cordially sustained. If the schools are not in all respects what we could desire, they are certainly better than they used to be. We have better books, the discipline is more rational and humane, and methods of instruction are vastly improved. It has been inspiring to look in on these companies of well dressed, cleanly, bright, well behaved children, so cheerfully studious and obedient to their intelligent, patient and faithful teachers. We may safely challenge comparison between our schools and those of the same grade in other towns. But it is well to be reminded that when scholars leave the common schools at so early an age as unfortunately they now too often do, and with changes of teachers too frequent however regretted not always to be prevented, especial efforts will be demanded to keep the condition of the schools up to the desired standard. Teachers must be expected to avail themselves of the many helps to be found in normal classes and institutes, and in the many books and periodicals especially designed for their improvement; and for the advancement of popular education, while the best text-books and all other necessary means and appliances should be generously furnished.

The first and second terms of the North school were taught by Miss Frederika B. Smith, of West Newbury, Mass. This teacher notably excelled in discipline and thoroughness of instruction. With exact and ample knowledge of school studies, always clear, correct and definite in teaching, she insisted upon and invariably secured diligent application and excellent recitations. In the judgment of the board she deservedly takes rank among our best common school teachers. Miss Smith was elected teacher of the East school for the third term, but resigned to take charge of a school which she had previously taught in Stratham.

The third term was taught by Jewett P. Swasey, of Exeter, the successful and popular incumbent of the last year. It was hoped until a late day that Mr. Swasey would comply with the earnest request of the board to renew his engagement for the entire year, but this his business arrangements would not permit. When however it was ascertained that his services could be obtained for the winter term, the pressure on the part of parents and scholars was too strong to be prudently resisted. The decision of the board was amply justified by his anticipated and usual success. Mr. Swasey at once gets the affection of his pupils. Every scholar looks into his face with a smile, assured of his sympathy and kindly assistance. Impartial in his attentions, the youngest and the dullest scholars equally share with the oldest and brightest, his patient and careful instructions. The presence of sixty-five visitors at the examination on the closing day of the term testified to the interest in and approval of his labors.

Mrs. R. Akerman who has had many years experience in teaching schools of a higher grade was by a happy providence secured at the begining of the year for the East school. Seeing just what was needed she soon put the school in her chosen line of progress, and kept every pupil diligently at work and steadily advancing till the close of her term of service. We have seldom seen a school more wisely guided and instructed just where and in what there was the greatest need. A peculiar school-house tone in reading was soon broken up and displaced by distinct articulation and by natural and appropriate tones and inflections of voice. Scholars caught the enthusiasm of the teacher, and every appointed duty was promptly and cheerfully done. Her well known intelligence, energy of character and reputation as a teacher led us to expect much and our expectations were more than realized. The precarious condition of her health necessitated her resignation at the close of the second term.

Through another unexpected providence—to us a propitious one—the work laid down by Mrs. Akerman regretfully to herself and to us all, was taken up by Miss S. A. Green. This teacher is believed to be the only Normal graduate who has ever taught in the town. Well equipped by education and by some fifteen years experience in teaching, possessing a mild and even temperament, pleasing and lady like in manners, she soon won the hearts of her pupils, and quietly and admirably met every demand of the school-room.

We are happy to add that Miss Green made more use of the blackboard in map drawing than our teachers have been wont to do. It is to be regretted that so little attention has been given to this kind of work. It is not expected that scholars or their teachers will draw a perfect map. Nor is the artistic excellence of the drawing first and chiefly to be desired. Form and location are the main important things to be fixed in the mind. A scholar who can rapidly and with some degree of accuracy draw the crayon around the boundaries of a country locating principal towns, mountains, rivers, lakes, &c., will soon have indelibly impressed upon the memory the geographical features of that country, while at the same time his perception of form and skill of manual execution will be constantly improving and his interest in the study of geography and history will be immeasurably increased.

Miss Mary A. Tilton has closed her third year as teacher of the West school. This school is numerically the smallest, and the average age of the scholars considerably less than that of the other schools. Owing to the smallness of the school and its somewhat isolated position, we fear this teacher has received less sympathy and fewer words of encouragement than the other teachers: she is therefore thought to merit special commendation for her patient and unfaltering efforts to do the best in her power. Scholars were never permitted to forget what they came to school for. Several of them made noticeable progress in their studies, and the daily deportment of all was commendable.

It is desirable that the number of classes in our schools should be greatly reduced. It is of course impossible to classify scholars as well in a mixed as in a graded school; but the evil referred to can be remedied in part. As it now is, parents, presumably at the importunity of their children who are ambitious to go into more advanced classes, purchase higher num bers in the series of text books, and the teachers, too willing to gratify both parents and their children, consent to the use of these books at too early a stage in the progress of the scholars. This is particularly the case in our reading classes. Unfortunately there are six numbers in the series of readers now in use, and we have nearly twice as many classes as there should be. It may be thought advisable to strictly enforce a rule that no scholar shall be promoted to a higher class without the approval of the Board of Education or of the superintendent elected by them, and this only after a suitable examination.

It is worthy of record and a matter for congratulation that instances of corporal punishment in the schools of the town are becoming less from year to year. This is believed to be attributable not only to progress in the qualifications and character of the teachers, but to a notable advance in popular sentiment and convictions. The horrible brutalities of the school-room which some of us remember and of which we were the victims, would not now be tolerated in a New England community. Is it not time to cry 'a halt' to the use of the ferule and the rod? It is no longer an open question that teachers who by sympathy and kindness can attach children to themselves personally, who by temperament and education are competent to instruct, can safely dispense with corporal punishment. As a relic of barbarism it is one of the most execrable.

The assumption that the teacher is autocrat of the school-room, if true at all, is so within very narrow limits. Law is supreme. It organizes the school, designates school officials and prescribes their duties. The teacher may do what no other person is permitted to do; but is still and always amenable to law. The will of an excited and angry teacher need not, and should not, directly antagonize the will of the child. Lessons of duty affectionately administered can reach the conscience, arouse the moral sensibilities, and excite self respect and self control. Kindness is more effectual than severity. Moral and rational beings should not be treated and educated like unreasoning and irresponsible brutes.
